PREFATORY

THIS collection of pictures, designed to illustrate in some degree contemporary German painting, is the result of several months of effort on the part of the Director of the Albright Art Gallery, in the interest of the Buffalo Fine Arts Academy, the St. Louis Museum of Fine Arts, the Chicago Art Institute, the John Herron Art Institute of Indianapolis, and the Corcoran Gallery of Art of Washington, D. C.

It was the aim to organize a collection of approximately one hundred pictures to exemplify, as nearly as possible, the best work of contemporary German painters — particularly those men whose work shows the more modern methods of expression. In the direction of selecting pictures for this exhibition, exhibitions of German painting were visited in London, Cologne, Berlin, Dresden, Weimar, Nuremberg, Munich, and Karlsruhe; and, in many German cities, studios of the artists were visited. It was hoped to secure the collection in time to open the series of exhibitions in the United States about the middle of October at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, in Philadelphia — which originally had arranged to participate in the enterprise — but it was found that so many of the artists had practically denuded their studios in order to be represented at one or other of the many summer exhibitions held in Germany — which were scheduled to terminate only at the end of October — that it was practically impossible to secure satisfactory works for such an exhibition at the time originally contemplated for the opening of the series of exhibitions. As the Pennsylvania Academy already had filled all its dates for the season after the middle of November, it was unable to continue as one of the participants in the plan.

The assembling of these pictures at one city in Germany and the packing and forwarding of them to this country has required a longer period than was anticipated. It was hoped that the exhibition might be opened in Buffalo early in December, 1906, instead of during the last days of that month.

The collection, as a whole, does not represent all the phases of contemporary German art, nor does it represent all the painters from whom contributions were desired or by whom pictures were promised. It was hoped to have several characteristic works by Liebermann, it was greatly desired to include at least one noteworthy picture by Boecklin, and more important works by Liebl and Menzel, but these it was found impossible to secure. Several painters, who are not represented, promised to send works which specifically were asked for. Among them may be mentioned Professor von Habermann, President of the Secession of Munich; Professor Albert Ritter von Keller, Professor Hans Borchardt, Professor Bernhard Buttersack, Professor Ludwig Dill, Reinhold Max Eichler, Professor Karl Haider, Rudolf Nissl, Ernst Oppler, Hermann Pleuer, and a few others. The works by these artists, which had been selected and which were counted upon, would have added to the attractiveness of the exhibit, and their absence is regretted. It is possible that some of these pictures were sold, but no specific information explaining their failure to appear with the other pictures was received.

At the outset, it was intended to confine the collection to approximately one hundred pictures, as it was considered that a small collection of high artistic quality, hung in such a manner as to insure liberal space for each picture, could be seen and studied to better advantage than a larger collection which might crowd the gallery walls. Consequently, when the number of pictures desired had been promised, no further solicitation of works was made, although there were many other German artists whose pictures would have been very acceptable had it been considered wise to extend the number of exhibits, or had it been imagined that certain painters would fail to keep their engagements. The interesting Worpswede group of painters — which is represented only by one of its members — it would have been a pleasure to have exemplified fully, had it been deemed wise to make the collection larger; and this is only one of a number of groups of strong individual painters in different parts of Germany whose works would have been acceptable.

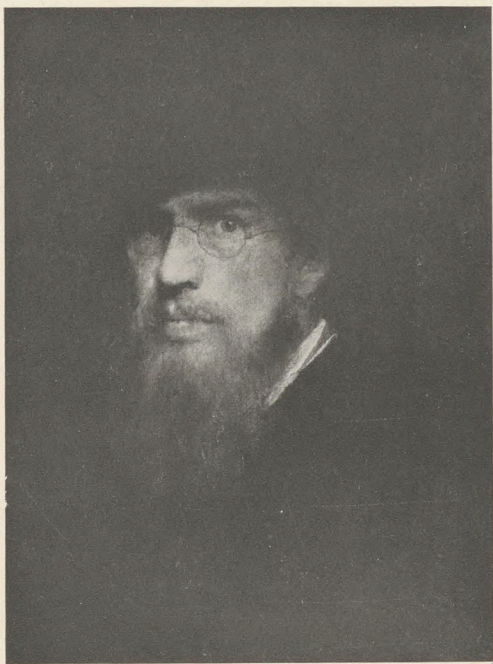

The artists whose works are included in the exhibition represent many cities of Germany; among them, Berlin, Munich, Düsseldorf, Dresden, Königsberg, Weimar, Stuttgart, Karlsruhe, and some of the smaller cities and towns.

It is hoped that the exhibition may arouse in America interest in phases of artistic effort not yet very much known to our people but which certainly are worthy of attention, and that it may inspire greater interest in the better works of German art than has prevailed in America during recent years. And it is further hoped that many of the pictures may find permanent place in American art museums and private collections.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT

THE thanks of the organizers of this exhibition of Contemporary German Painting are tendered to the artists represented and to those persons in Germany and elsewhere who have actively coöperated in the work and to those who have given sympathetic coöperation. Among those to whom special thanks are due are Professor Dr. Hugo von Tschudi, Director of the National Gallery, Berlin; Hofrat Adolf Paulus, of Berlin; Professor Carl Marr, of Munich; Madame Lola von Lenbach, of Munich; J. Hemsley Johnson, of Baltimore, Md.; the houses of Eduard Schulte, Berlin; Fritz Gurlitt, Berlin; D. Heinemann, Munich, and Theodore Heinemann, of New York City.

A SERIES of articles on Contemporary German Painting was begun in "Academy Notes" for the month of August, 1906, and was continued through the issues for September, October, November, and December. The present exhibition was noticed in the issues for January and February, 1907. Copies of issues of the current volume of "Academy Notes" may be obtained at the Albright Art Gallery, Buffalo, at ten cents a copy, or will be mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address: Publisher of "Academy Notes," Albright Art Gallery, Buffalo, N. Y.
